Child care licensing california

Children with childcare provider This website contains videos explaining licensed topics that are relevant to families and providers of licensed child minders. Learn more about how nurseries and nurseries can protect and promote children's health and safety. Learn about the work of the California Department of Social Services' Community Care Licensing Division in protecting the health and safety of children in licensed child care facilities. This video provides useful answers to the following questions: How does licensing ensure the health and safety of children in child care? What types of approved childcare facilities does licensing oversee? How does licensing work with licensed childcare providers? Which videos are right for you? Title California Child Day Care Act Title Child Day Care (CCC) Act of 2010 Starting a child care business in California includes a certain set of legal considerations specific to both the type of business and the state of California. These include choosing the right business entity, obtaining permits and permits, dealing with health and safety, getting adequate insurance, and dealing with employees. If we review some of these considerations, keep in mind that the terms child care and child care are largely interchangeable in California: many of the state's laws, publications and websites refer to child care rather than childcare. For more information about other business opportunities in California, see Nolo's section on Starting a Business in California. Choose the business entity Although you operate your child care business as a sole proprietorship or partnership, you should consider using a legal form that protects you from personal liability, such as a limited liability company or a company. A childcare center may not be the most dangerous business, but you will be taking care of the most precious thing in your customers' lives: their children. You are responsible for the health and safety of these children, many of whom may be toddlers, for hours a day. There is always a possibility that a child may be injured while on the premises of your child care company—in which case you would want the company, not you personally, to be responsible for any liability. Learn more about choosing a company structure. Licenses and permits In California, the licensing of child care companies is handled through the Child Care Licensing Division (CCLD) of the Department of Social Services (DSS). You need a license if you care for children from more than one family that has nothing to do with you. Working without the required license can lead to significant An important distinction made by California's child care laws is between care in a person's home (Family Day Care of Family Child Care) and care provided at an independent facility (Child Care Center). Licence and renewal costs are higher and regulations more extensive for childcare. You must attend an orientation session before applying for a permit for a family child care (in-home) company or a childcare centre (located separately) company. To plan an orientation, you must contact the nearest state licensing agency; a list of locations is available online. You must pay a non-refundable fee for orientation. After you successfully complete the orientation, you must complete the license application. The application asks for a variety of information, including: what ages of children you will take care of (infants, toddlers, preschoolers, school age) what capacity you are looking for for children in each age group whether you own the property where care will be provided or your business will be for profit or non-profit, and recognitions regarding knowledge of, and compliance with, the , health and safety, criminal record and other regulations You will also have to pay a license application fee. This fee will vary depending on the number of children you will care for, but can run into the hundreds of dollars, with a similar amount due each next year as a renewal fee. More information about licenses is available on the CCLD's website. Aside from state permits, you should keep in mind that there are local zoning laws that would prohibit running a child care business in a particular location. This is more likely to be a problem if you are thinking of operating the business out of your home and you live in a clearly residential, as opposed to commercial, area. Even if a childcare center is allowed under the local zoning ordinance, you may be required to obtain a compliance certificate from the local zoning authority. In short, your best bet is to explore zoning plans before you open for business. Health and safety The government is deeply concerned about the health and safety of babies and small children, and California's child care regulations have been expanded. For example, one of the state's manuals of policies and procedures for home-based child care companies is more than 80 pages long; the manual for freestanding childcare centers is much longer. With some variation, depending on whether you operate from your home or an independent childcare centre, key areas of state regulations include: criminal record approvals, including checks related to child abuse fire safety approvals and training requirements for center staff reporting requirements when children need medical treatment or there are other unusual incidents ratio of staff to children requirement that individual name licensee is present at the center safety of toys and playgrounds on cigarette smoking calmoad evacuation planning financial administration requirements specific teacher-to-children ratios for toddlers transporting children food service requirements sleep minimum required outdoor building fixtures and equipment distinction between baby care, toddler/toddler and school-age care, and the state inspection authority As the last item on the list indicates, the state has the authority to inspect your operation. These inspections may be unannounced and may include interviews of children and staff. They may also be inspecting part of the nursery, or those parts of a home in which childcare is provided. Also, you should expect that a fire chief or another fire prevention officer will have an inspection to ensure that there are sufficient routes of escape in case of fire. The CCLD has readable regulatory highlights documents that provide more details on these matters for both freestanding childcare centres and in-home family childcare; the documents are available on the CCLD's website. Tax deduction If you run your childcare business outside your home, you may deduct the cost to the business. To be eligible, you must (a) provide child care to children and (b) have a state license or be exempt from the state's licensing obligation. Details on how to figure out the deduction can be found at IRS Publication 587, available on irs.gov. Insurance There are particular risks associated with the operation of a childcare centre, primarily those relating to the health and safety of infants and small children. These are on top of more generic business risks such as fire, theft, or other sources of property damage or personal injury. Try working with an insurance agent who has experience writing policies for child care providers. Consider coverage for sexual abuse or molestation, for corporal punishment, and for employees who are child care providers. In general, make sure you have an excellent general liability policy. For more information, see Nolo's article on obtaining business insurance. Employees Most nurseries have employees and in many cases there can be a relatively high turnover. You should inform yourself about fundamental employment law issues such as illegal discrimination, employee compensation and how to deal with the recruitment process. With regard to hiring in particular, learn how: make a useful job application that doesn't check illegal questions credentials or create other preemployment investigations – again without violating privacy laws or otherwise seeking illegal information, and ask interview questions that are both useful and legally allowed. Please note that there are a number of labor laws that are specifically relevant to day care workers, such as state training requirements and rules regarding criminal records. California requires the licensee of a home-based child care operation, and at least one duty employee at a child care center, to be trained in pediatric resuscitation, first and other health-related areas. A good source for general employment issues is The Employer's Legal Handbook, by Fred Steingold (Nolo). Also, many important labour laws are managed through the Ministry of Labour, and there are a variety of informative information within the website of the Ministry of Labour. Website.
